Together with the support of the local customs and government authorities, YCH is confident of further contributing to the booming logistics and supply chain scene in the various Chinese and Asian regions.

6 ENTREPRENEUR OF THE YEAR The Business Times, Thursday, November 29, 2007

A handshake and the rest was history

CEO Robert Yap has turned logistics firm YCH into a regional player, reports NISHA RAMCHANDANI

As a young boy, joining the family business was the furthest thing from Robert Yap's mind.

Despite spending his childhood days helping out with basic book-keeping and truck catches for the passenger transportation company started by his late father, Dr Yap - chairman and CEO of supply chain management and logistics company YCH Group - did not entertain any thought of running the business as he grew older. Fast, however, intervened.

In the year that Dr Yap graduated from university, the company lost its main customer - Public Utilities Board - which accounted for 50 per cent of its business.

"I had had to do what was necessary as the eldest son, and came to be workaholic. Other than my own large family with many siblings, the fate of what we perceived to be a large company being of 190 drivers (at that time) was also at stake. It was a do-or-die kind of situation," he said.

Two years later, Dr Yap had successfully managed to turn the business around and was considering how to proceed his MBA.

"My dad however, asked what it would take to make me stay in the business. Looking, I replied, 'If you retire and let me do it my way'. To my surprise, with just a handshake, he left it all to me and the rest was history," Dr Yap recalled.

Nevertheless, Dr Yap acknowledges that destiny alone is not nearly sufficient to get the job done. "To work, you have to persevere. I know there I read not fail, as a handshake represents that a promise has been made. I know I had to keep my word," he added.

In an effort to challenge himself, he started to look into other areas such as warehousing, freight and IT, which later helped shape the business into the integrated end-to-end supply chain management and logistics company YCH is today.

In this entrepreneurial spirit that prompted Grant & Young to award Dr Yap the title of Entrepreneur of the Year 2007 for Logistics for their EOY Awards Singapore 2007.

As the company grew further, it started to regionalise and advance on a particular strategy, working together with its customers in the countries that they wanted to be in. "The next phase, said Dr Yap, will be "beyond supply chain", where we continue to improve and use the integration of the physical, information and financial flows to build what we envision to be the "Logistics Superhighway".

Revenue for FY2006 was over $164 million and the company is projecting turnover of over $200 million this year. YCH are targeting figures of $1 billion by 2010. Dr Yap said it, so we are expecting exponential growth.

It covers countries such as India, Malaysia and most importantly among its customers. While head-quartered here, YCH also operates in countries such as Malaysia, Thailand, Indonesia, Australia, China and India. In order to maintain its competitive edge, YCH is looking to leverage on its IT solutions as well as strengthen its growing network in Asia and across the Asia Pacific.

Dr Yap also highlighted the need to keep abreast of regional developments, as he views supply chain management (SCM) as a "non-riding piece" in lesser global trade. Strategies need to be planned in line with the region's development and should be according to both the economic and political climate.

"YCH is also very aligned to the neo-Asian strategy. Positioned strongly as a leading SCM player in the Asian region, YCH will continue to move very strongly and grow aggressively as a leading logistics/SCM player in this region and focus on complementing the scalability of the growing manufacturing in this region," added Dr Yap.

Dr Yap: 'Value chain my own larger family with many siblings, the fate of what we perceived as the large corporate family of 190 drivers left that stake was also at stake. It was a do-or-die kind of situation.'

Business Times, 29 Nov 2007 (pg 6)

As a follow up to Robert's win at the Ernst & Young Entrepreneur of the Year awards, the Business Times published a story on how Robert, as a second generation entrepreneur successfully evolved a local, family-based passenger transportation company to a world-class supply chain firm that counts its main clientele amongst the Fortune 500 MNCs today. Recounting destiny as one of the main reasons that brought him into the business, Robert cites the handshake - YCH's sign of friendship, trust and integrity - to represent his initial promise to his father to grow the business, as well as a constant undertaking to pursue supply chain excellence with our valued customers and partners.

YCH was featured in a recent article in the Austin American-Statesman website as a strategic partner contributing to Dell's growth journey and developments in the PC industry in Asia.

DELL LEARNS THE ROPES IN ASIA

TYING MALAYSIA, CHINA AND INDIA INTO BUILD-TO-ORDER SYSTEM WASN'T ALWAYS EASY

By Dan Zehr | 19 Nov, 2007

Excerpts from the article:

Dell's other crucial partner in its Asia manufacturing cycle is the YCH Group, a logistics company based in Singapore.

In a conference room high above a cavernous warehouse less than a mile from Dell's Xiamen factories, YCH General Manager Koh Yong Seng describes how tightly his operations are linked to Dell's.

Every two hours or so, Dell's plants send out an order for parts, under its famous lean model that keeps in-plant inventories low. Koh's workers pull together the order and, if everything goes to plan, deliver it just as the assembly teams are ready for it.

Dell and YCH have a similar operation in Penang, and Koh said the firm expects to be near Dell's new plant in Chennai, as well. At each location, he said, the companies work closely together to refine the process and reduce the time it takes to fulfill each order. Five years ago, he said, it could take YCH as long as eight hours to fill an order. Today, it's about 90 minutes. "It would be very difficult to reduce it from 90 minutes to 80 minutes because there is really no more fat," he said.

Yet that's what YCH and Dell try to do. For example, Koh said, YCH is encouraging Dell to adopt more radio frequency identification, or RFID, technologies. It uses the system with other companies, he said, so it can avoid scanning every carton that goes out the door. Every bit of time counts when you're trying to speed up the process — from the delivery of supplies to the delivery of the finished product. "You might not be saving an hour," Koh said. "You might be saving a few minutes, and that really counts."

ERIA SYMPOSIUM 6 NOVEMBER 2007: SCM IS KEY TO REGIONAL ECONOMIC INTEGRATION

CEO Dr Robert Yap shared his perspectives on the important role of logistics and SCM in Regional Economic Integration for ASEAN and East Asia

YCH participated in the ERIA (Economic Research Institute for ASEAN and East Asia) Symposium held at the Goodwork Park Hotel, Singapore on 6 November 2007. Themed 'Opportunities & Challenges Towards Regional Integration in East Asia', the symposium was jointly organised by the Singapore Institute of International Affairs (SIIA), Japan External Trade Organisation (JETRO) and ASEAN Secretariat.

The ERIA plays a significant role in proposing policies and recommendations for regional economic integration; imperative themes include regional production networks, development of SMEs, alternative energy and regional initiatives to mitigate climate change.

Distinguished guests-of-honor at the high-level event included key political leaders such as Ms Kanae Yamamoto, Vice Minister of Economy, Trade and Industry, Japan, Mr S. Iswaran, Minister of State for Trade & Industry, Singapore and Mr Ong Keng Yong, Secretary-General of the ASEAN Secretariat, all of who presented significant insights to the region's macro economic developments, trends and collaboration opportunities.

The rest of the session was supplemented by views and perspectives from key representatives from the academia and corporate industry. YCH Chairman & CEO, Dr Robert Yap shared his insights on Regional Production Networks in East Asia as part of the roadmap leading towards economic integration in the region.

It is hoped that such initiatives from these three main stakeholder groups, namely the government, the academia and the business community will be able to work together to create a conducive environment for ASEAN and East Asia to deepen integration, narrow gaps of economic development, and achieve sustainable economic growth.

YCH is proud to be invited as an important industry player in SCM, particularly so as SCM and logistics have been identified by the regional business and academic leaders as a crucial growth enabler and one of the main integrating factors of the East Asia production network.

WORLD SHIPPERS' CONFERENCE 18TH SEPTEMBER 2007: PAVING THE WAY FORWARD FOR ASIAN SHIPPERS

The World Shippers' Conference was held in Kuala Lumpur on 18 September 2007, as a precursor to the 30th Annual General Meeting of the Federation of ASEAN Shippers' Council (FASC) on 19 September. Focused on the theme "Maritime Competition, Exporters / Importers Challenges", the main objectives of the conference were to discuss the issues and challenges on the global logistics and transportation of goods; discover solutions for overcoming these challenges; and provide a networking platform for parties interested in logistics issues affecting importers and exporters in international trade, in particular shipping issues.

Participants, who were keen on promoting shippers' competitiveness, came from the various relevant government councils, statutory boards, overseas shipper councils as well as manufacturers and logistics service companies from the private sector.

YCH Chairman & CEO Dr Robert Yap was invited to deliver a presentation on "The Way Forward for Asian Shippers" during the conference, by providing a diverse point-of-view as a service provider able to provide solutions to the woes of Asian shippers in the competitive global marketplace. The main takeaway for the audience on the topic was to be always prepared for and embrace paradigm shifts, as well as to be innovative and value-driven in order to remain competitive through supply chain optimisation, leveraging of IT processes and streamlining of flows.

The Fire and Emergency Preparedness drill conducted on 17 September at YCH DistriPark is one such initiative that stresses on the importance of preparedness in emergency situations. In order to prevent and reduce injury to personnel and minimise property damage and loss, a detailed demonstration was conducted to teach employees various preventive measures and operational actions that have to be undertaken to contain any Hazmat leaks/spills and to control or extinguish any fires in the event of emergency situations that occur within the installation. Similarly, the Chemical Spillage Handling & Prevention exercise held at the YCH ChemPark was also conducted successfully on 14 December. Both EHS exercises were a success. Fire fighters and other professionals from the Singapore Civil Defence Force (SCDF) were also present on both occasions to demonstrate the use of different industrial and commercial fire extinguishers and tools available to enrich the crowd's learning experience through mock scenarios of possible real-life situations.

YCH believes that vigilance for EHS is essential within our working environment. The importance of practising good housekeeping and ensuring prevention, preparedness and response is vital towards achieving operational excellence in a stringent and secure supply chain environment.

YCH Family Day @ Sentosa

24 Nov - The much anticipated YCH Family Day took place in tranquil Sentosa, at the upbeat Café Del Mar with a hip party ambience that appealed to a diverse crowd. Despite the unpredictable weather that day, YCHees streamed into the venue with much enthusiasm and camaraderie as they looked forward to the suite of fun activities that day.

The Winning Team of the YCH Amazing Race adventure hails from ASRS

Before the event, the organising committee mooted the idea of holding a family day on an island and created a theme around the popular "Amazing Race" adventure concept to reach two main objectives – to excite the young and the young-at-heart who were game for challenges; as well as to allow the children and family members of our YCHees to have fun – through promoting teamwork and strategy. There was a total of 13 participating teams that went round the island in search of 10 hidden clues within the stipulated time limit of 60 minutes. Congratulations to the "ASRS team" led by Eng Hoe San (Head, ASRS); their quick thinking and close cooperation led them to bag the first prize!

Others enjoyed cooling off in Café Del Mar's Swimming Pool and Jacuzzi, while the kids were dazzled by the interesting Magic Show and Balloon sculpting sessions.

An enjoyable and relaxing day for all

Cheering on our sporty colleague Ramesh from IT

Rizal and Rosnani taking their 'victory walk' after being crowned YCH Beach Hunk and Beach Babe respectively

Each child also went home with an attractive goody bag to commemorate the event.

There was also a search for the YCH Hunk and Babe – Congratulations to Rizal and Rosnani for emerging as the winners with the highest votes.

Our heartfelt appreciation for the organising committee for their efforts in making the annual event a great success. Dr Marako Marcus, Head of Centre of Organizational Development said, "What made it especially successful was the spirit in which YCHees took up the challenge, especially in the Amazing Race. I think the RISE values shown by all the participants were absolutely like what the name of the game says... Amazing!"

The YCH Family Day organising committee is already planning for next year's event with a YCH "Survivor" Adventure theme. Are you ready to "out-wit, out-play and out-laugh" each other? You're welcome to give your feedback or contribute ideas for next year's Family Day at hr@ych.com!
